· RUSKIN ·

PRINTED IN ENGLAND

That country is the richest which nourishes the greatest number of noble and happy beings; that man is richest who, having perfected the functions of his own life to the utmost, has also the widest helpful influence, both personal, and by means of his possessions, over the lives of others.

UNTO THIS LAST.

JOHN RUSKIN, the greatest and most exceptional of all writers on Art, was born in London on February 8, 1819. His father, a well-to-do wine merchant, hailed from Scotland, but settled in London; and here, and at Herne Hill, John Ruskin, an only child, was educated privately until he went to Oxford. At Christ Church he gained, by a poem on Salsette and Elephanta, the Newdigate prize for English poetry in 1839, and he took his degree in 1842.

Ruskin studied painting under Copley Fielding and Harding, but it is through his literary work that his name will be for ever memorable.

In 1843 he published the first volume of "Modern Painters," and although Ruskin says of himself in his "Præterita," that most delightful of all autobiographies, "I am, and my father was before me, a violent Tory of the old school (Walter Scott's school, that is to say, and Homer's). I name these two out of the numberless great Tory writers, because they were my own two masters," there can be no doubt that his "Modern Painters" was distinctly revolutionary in thought, and caused a considerable amount of excitement and hostility in Art circles at the time.

On the other hand, it was admitted by one and all that a splendid and luminous literary genius had arisen, that a great and sincere mind was at work for the ennoblement of Art and for the general good of human nature. It can be imagined, therefore, that Ruskin soon had his followers; and that they increase in numbers day by day is certain.

Other volumes of "Modern Painters" followed, the fifth and last appearing in 1860. In 1849 he published "The Seven Lamps of Architecture," and in 1851-3 "The Stones of Venice." He was a prolific writer, dealing not only with Art, but with such deep and important subjects as political philosophy and social and political economy.

Among his many works should be mentioned "The Two Paths," lectures on art as applied to decoration; "Sesame and Lilies," lectures on literature; "Ariadne Florentina," on engraving; "Aratra Pentelici," on sculpture; "Munera Pulveris," which deals with political economy, and "Unto this Last," which the author himself thought the finest of his writings. Of these essays he writes: "I believe them to be the best, that is to say, the truest, rightest-worded, and most serviceable things I have ever written; and the last of them, having had especial pains spent on it, is probably the best I shall ever write."

Ruskin was Slade Professor of Art at Oxford from 1869 to 1879, and was re-elected for this post in 1883, but resigned the following year. He was a D.C.L. of Oxford, and LL.D. of Cambridge.

In his later days he retired to the lovely Lake District, where his mind was in full harmony with the beauty of his surroundings, taking up his abode at Brantwood on Coniston Lake.

That the splendid genius of that great artist Turner was early recognised is proved by the honours that were bestowed upon him; but it is unquestionable that the knowledge and popularity of his paintings would not have been so widely extended if it had not been for the appreciative writing of the great Art critic, Ruskin, in "Modern Painters"—if the intense admiration of the author for the artist's works had not existed. That the world of Art is a great republic is emphasised by the fact that such opposite characters as that of Turner and Ruskin were, through their respective arts, so closely associated, and it is certain that their names will be linked together on the roll of the Immortals.

Ruskin died at Coniston on January 20, 1900, leaving behind him not only an appreciation and criticism of Art and Artists unequalled for its eloquence and truth, but a high philosophy and nobility of thought that will be a lasting benefit to the world for all time.

From "SESAME AND LILIES."

The good book of the hour . . . is simply the useful or pleasant talk of some person whom you cannot otherwise converse with, printed for you. Very useful often, telling you what you need to know; very pleasant often, as a sensible friend's present talk would be. These bright accounts of travels; good-humoured and witty discussions of question; lively or pathetic story-telling in the form of novel; firm fact-telling, by the real agents concerned in the events of passing history;—all these books of the hour, multiplying among us as education becomes more general, are a peculiar characteristic and possession of the present age: we ought to be entirely thankful for them, and entirely ashamed of ourselves if we make no good use of them. But we make the worst possible use, if we allow them to usurp the place of true books: for, strictly speaking, they are not books at all, but merely letters or newspapers in good print. Our friend's letter may be delightful, or necessary, to-day: whether worth keeping or not, is to be considered. The newspaper may be entirely proper at breakfast-time, but assuredly it is not reading for all day. So, though bound up in a volume, the long letter which gives you so pleasant an account of the inns, and roads, and weather last year at such a place, or which tells you that amusing story, or gives you the real circumstances of such and such events, however valuable for occasional reference, may not be, in the real sense of the word, a "book" at all, nor, in the real sense, to be "read." A book is essentially not a talked thing, but a written thing; and written, not with the view of mere communication, but of permanence. The book of talk is printed only because its author cannot speak to thousands of people at once; if he could, he would—the volume is mere multiplication of his voice. You cannot talk to your friend in India; if you could, you would; you write instead: that is mere conveyance of voice. But a book is written, not to multiply the voice merely, not to carry it merely, but to preserve it. The author has something to say which he perceives to be true and useful, or helpfully beautiful. So far as he knows, no one has yet said it; so far as he knows, no one else can say it. He is bound to say it, clearly and melodiously if he may; clearly, at all events. In the sum of his life he finds this to be the thing, or group of things, manifest to him;—this the piece of true knowledge, or sight, which his share of sunshine and earth has permitted him to seize. He would fain set it down for ever; engrave it on rock, if he could; saying, "This is the best of me; for the rest, I ate, and drank, and slept, loved, and hated, like another; my life was as the vapour, and is not; but this I saw and knew: this, if anything of mine, is worth your memory." That is his "writing"; it is, in his small human way, and with whatever degree of true inspiration is in him, his inscription, or scripture. That is a "Book."

Wise laws and just restraints are to a noble nation not chains, but chain mail—strength and defence, though something also of an incumbrance.

THE TWO PATHS.

May 26.

The higher the mind, it may be taken as a universal rule, the less it will scorn that which appears to be small or unimportant.

MODERN PAINTERS.

May 27.

With respect to knowledge, we are to reason and act exactly as with respect to food. We no more live to know, than we live to eat.

Religion is, of all subjects, that which will least endure a second place in the heart or thoughts.
THE STONES OF VENICE.

June 13.

Nature has for the most part mingled her inferior and nobler elements as she mingles sunshine with shade, giving due use and influence to both.
MODERN PAINTERS.

June 14.

Every great writer may be at once known by his guiding the mind far from himself to the beauty which is not of his creation, and the knowledge which is past his finding out.

Be assured, there is no part of the furniture of a man's mind which he has a right to exult in, but that which he has hewn and fashioned for himself.

THE STONES OF VENICE.

July 2.

The greatest thing a human soul ever does in this world is to see something, and tell what it saw in a plain way.

MODERN PAINTERS.

July 3.

With all thoroughly great men, their strength is not seen at first, precisely because they unite, in due place and measure, every great quality.

THE TWO PATHS.

July 4.

He alone can appreciate the art, who could comprehend the conversation of the painter, and share his emotion, in moments of his most fiery passion and most original thought.

MODERN PAINTERS.

If we have the power of teaching the right to anybody, we should teach them the right.

THE TWO PATHS.

July 8.

In all well-conducted lives, the hard work, and roughing, and gaining of strength come first, the honour or decoration in certain intervals during their course, but most of all in their close.

THE STONES OF VENICE.

July 9.

If the distinctive forms of animal life are meant for our reverent observance, is it likely that those of vegetable life are made merely to be swept away?

MODERN PAINTERS.

July 10.

If we are to teach at all, let us teach the right thing, and ever the right thing.

THE TWO PATHS.

July 11.

A certain degree of reverence for fair scenery is found in all our great writers without exception.

MODERN PAINTERS.

July 12.

Whatever we have in any sort begun wisely, it is good to finish thoroughly.

MODERN PAINTERS.

July 13.

Knowledge is mental food, and is exactly to the spirit what food is to the body.

THE STONES OF VENICE.

July 14.

What responsibility may sometimes attach to words, which yet, the chance is, will be heard by few, and forgotten as soon as heard.

THE TWO PATHS.

I do not want marble churches at all for their own sake, but for the sake of the spirit that would build them.

SEVEN LAMPS OF ARCHITECTURE.

July 17.

The man's work for his own home . . . to secure its maintenance, progress, and defence; the woman's to secure its order, comfort, and loveliness.

SESAME AND LILIES.

July 18.

Great art is precisely that which never was, nor will be taught;
it is pre-eminently and finally the expression of the spirits of great men.

MODERN PAINTERS.

July 19.

What we want art to do for us is to stay what is fleeting, and to enlighten what is incomprehensible.

THE STONES OF VENICE.

July 20.

You must love the creatures to whom you minister, your fellow-men.

THE TWO PATHS.

July 21.

Judgment is a general term, expressing definite action of the intellect, and applicable to every kind of subject which can be submitted to it?

MODERN PAINTERS.

July 22.

The snow, the vapour, and the stormy wind fulfil His word.
Are our acts and thoughts lighter and wilder than these —that we should forget it?

The mind of an educated man . . . is like the vault of heaven, encompassing the earth which lives and flourishes beneath it.
THE STONES OF VENICE.

July 26.

A woman, in any rank of life, ought to know whatever her husband is likely to know, but to know it in a different way.

SESAME AND ILILIES.

July 27.

Let us strive, with just veneration for that future, first to do what is worthy to be spoken, and then to speak it faithfully.
MODERN PAINTERS.

July 28.

The thoughtful man is gone far away to seek ; but the perceiving man must sit still, and open his heart to receive.
THE STONES OF VENICE.

July 29.

All our moral feelings are so inwoven with our intellectual powers, that we cannot affect the one without in some degree addressing the other.

MODERN PAINTERS.

July 30.

It ought to be impossible for every noble youth . . . to love any one whose gentle counsel he cannot trust, or whose prayerful command he can hesitate to obey.

SESAME AND LILIES.

July 31.

The whole function of the artist in the world is to be a seeing and feeling creature.

THE STONES OF VENICE.

August 1.

Although everything in nature is more or less beautiful, every species of object has its own kind and degree of beauty.

MODERN PAINTERS.

August 2.

We treat God with irreverence by banishing Him from our thoughts, not by referring to His will on slight occasions.

SEVEN LAMPS OF ARCHITECTURE.

August 3.

The artist is bound to receive all things on the broad, white, lucid field of his soul, not to grasp at one.
THE STONES OF VENICE.

August 4.

Ideas of beauty are among the noblest which can be presented to the human mind, invariably exalting and purifying it according to their degree.

MODERN PAINTERS.

August 5.

God has made every man fit for his work.

SHIPPING AT COWES

There is more in Turner's painting of water surface than any philosophy of reflection or any peculiarity of means, can account for or accomplish.

MODERN PAINTERS.

August 8.

It is the type of an eternal truth—that the soul's armour is never well set to the heart unless a woman's hand has braced it.

SESAME AND LILIES.

August 9.

Nature is always mysterious and secret in the use of her means, and art is always likest her when it is most inexplicable.

MODERN PAINTERS.

August 10.

Endurance is nobler than strength, and patience than beauty.

THE TWO PAINTERS.

August 11.

The real thing is not so much whether we have done a given thing as well as possible, as whether we have turned a given quantity of labour to the best account.

MODERN PAINTERS.

August 12.

Every action, down even to the drawing of a line or utterance of a syllable, is capable of a peculiar dignity in the manner of it.

SEVEN LAMPS OF ARCHITECTURE.

Every painter ought to paint what he himself loves, not what others have loved.

MODERN PAINTERS.

November 17.

Whatever was great in human art was the expression of man's delight in God's work.

THE TWO PATHS.

November 18.

In the main, we require from buildings, as from men, two kinds of goodness: first, the doing their practical duty well, then that they be graceful and pleasing in doing it

From Essays on Art.

Be assured that all the best things and treasures of this world are not to be produced by each generation for itself; but we are all intended, not to carve our work in snow that will melt, but each and all of us to be continually rolling a great white gathering snowball, higher and higher—larger and larger—along the Alps of human power. . . . The work of living men not superseding, but building itself upon the work of the past. Nearly every great and intellectual race of the world has produced, at every period of its career, an art with some peculiar and precious character about it, wholly unattainable by any other race, and at any other time; and the intention of Providence concerning that art, is evidently that it should all grow together into one mighty temple; the rough stones and the smooth all finding their place and rising, day by day, in richer and higher pinnacles to heaven.
